

George Longhorn

George is a humble conservative that values the impact of education. Everyday, he drinks the same black coffee his father used to drink, puts on a suit and drives his 95 Buick Lesabre to make sure he gets his favorite parking spot at work. As a history professor at the local community college, his curriculum has not changed since he started using PowerPoint in 1998. At the beginning of each semester, he states that his students should only be using a notebook and pen.

Longhorn has developed a reputation for calling students out in the middle of class if they were to have a mobile device and telling them to leave. Most nights, he finds himself scrolling through ratemyproffessor.com seeing if anyone else has written a negative review about him. Each semester he notices a lower number of students registering for his courses and fears he may lose his job before retirement.

George values caring individuals, traditions, organization, cleanliness, determination, genuine gestures from colleagues and students
